

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An highly specific and sensitive approach to detecting antibodies to collagen in a biological sample entails contacting the sample with an antigen that comprises the CB10 peptide of mammalian type II collagen, or with an antibody-binding fragment of that peptide, under conditions conducive to formation of an antibody-antigen complex, which then is detected.